Corporate Governance Watch 2010

CG momentum in Asia slows in recent crisis years

Hong Kong – Wednesday, 22 September 2010 - CLSA Asia-Pacific Markets ('CLSA'), Asia's leading, independent brokerage and investment group, has released its Corporate Governance (CG) Watch 2010, the 8th survey of corporate governance in Asia since 2000. Produced in collaboration with the Asian Corporate Governance Association (ACGA), the report examines 580 Asia-listed companies and 11 countries, including Japan, to produce the most comprehensive assessment of corporate governance performance, issues and trends in Asia.

The report title 'Stray not into perdition', suggests that while corporate governance ('CG') standards have improved in Asia over the past decade, even the top performing markets remain far from international best practice. Regulators make it too easy for companies to box-tick and markets still lack effective rules on fundamentals such as independent directors and audit committees. Meanwhile, most institutional investors are yet to invest sufficiently in voting, engagement or stewardship.

Commenting on the overall findings, CLSA Head of Thematic Research, Amar Gill said: "The 2008 global financial crisis was a wasted opportunity. Rather than using it to push reform forward, most governments have taken a complacent view, happy that the crisis this time did not start in Asia. Not enough has been invested to make best practices work and the negative trends we see may lead to a build-up of governance risk for the coming years."

"The structures and processes of good CG may not obviously boost the performance of a business, but without them investors face the risk that the economic value created may be hijacked. In the worst case scenario, lack of CG demolishes a stock. Now with a CG score in place, investors have the opportunity to reduce risk and achieve higher returns by avoiding the worst CG companies," said Gill.

The overall analysis of companies shows that large-caps tend to have better CG scores. Corporations were reviewed in relation to discipline, transparency, independence, accountability, responsibility and fairness. In addition, environmental practice was surveyed to provide the CLSA Clean & Green ('C&G') score and for the first time, Corporate Social Responsibility ('CSR') activities were also assessed.

Asia now accounts for more than 20% of global CSR reports versus just 12% five years ago. Even Chinese companies are encouraged to publish CSR reports to improve the country's branding and competitiveness. CLSA Head of Sustainable Research, Simon Powell said: "We find that overall, more stringent environmental laws have been implemented in the region. However, many companies mix up contributing to charities as CSR, which is no substitute to proactively engaging with society for better outcomes."

Among the country rankings, Singapore replaces Hong Kong at the top in 2010 while Thailand, Japan and Indonesia stand out this year as they were often seen as underperforming in the past. Malaysia and China also deserve merits whose scores rose by three and four percentage points. The Philippines, Indonesia and Korea are at the bottom of the market rankings, with The Philippines coming last.

Author of the CG Watch 2010 country analysis, Secretary General of the ACGA Jamie Allen said: "The reality is that most Asian markets are starting to lag behind global standards. The private sector has to undertake governance reforms proactively and see this as in their own self-interest. Markets that do this well will likely sustain their regulatory reforms more effectively and efficiently."

The ACGA assessed 11 markets across Asia, asking 90 questions in four categories: CG rules and practices; enforcement; political and regulatory environment; accounting and auditing.
